Future investment strategy

Global equity markets continue to appear expensive, with earnings downgrades bottoming out, but not yet showing signs of the positive earnings revisions phase needed to justify the current level. However, slowly reducing inflation around the world provides a potential put option should economies deteriorate. Market persistency, which is the proportion of months the market moves in the same direction as the previous month, has lifted which is encouraging as it indicates improving stability. At home, while the earnings and valuation picture looks similar, stubborn inflation and solid growth in employment makes the situation more tricky for our Reserve Bank to navigate, especially in light of the July tax cuts, and an interest rate lift might now be required in order to apply the brakes on the economy. If this turns out to be the case, consumers could be particularly negatively affected. We have witnessed since April a softening of consumer conditions which, combined with higher wages and rents, will likely put further pressure on the earnings of retailers. Banks' bad debt levels thus far remain benign, allowing the banks to smooth their declining earnings by releasing provisions. A change in economic conditions could however bring an end to this which, given their elevated valuations, is a risk we are cognisant of. The consumer has remained resilient so far thanks to high savings and high employment, but another rate lift could prove to be the tipping point for some cohorts. While negative earnings revisions across the market seem to have stabilised, the only sectors in which we are seeing some upgrades are Energy, Utilities, Banks (although largely through provision releases), and Insurers. We are however on the cusp of reporting the FY24 season so much will likely change in the next month or two. Geopolitics remains a risk to keep monitoring as any further escalation in conflicts would likely result in higher oil prices and higher transportation costs, both of which would add further to inflation. China is showing the early signs of stabilising its problem child, the property market. The Resources sector however is experiencing mixed revisions: gold remains elevated, base metals have corrected and fundamentals appear supportive in the medium term, and lithium keeps disappointing. The energy transition appears to be on pause for now as the studies conducted over the past few years have come back with challenging economics which will require government subsidies and/or customers willing to pay even higher costs. Given all the elections around the world, more certainty is required before these are progressed.
