Market and portfolio review

Australian Equities performed strongly in the June quarter, after initially falling following the announcement of sweeping tariffs by the US. Alphinity outperformed due to positive stock selection in information technology, industrials, real estate and consumer discretionary. OC Small Caps outperformed both its own benchmark and the ASX 300 Accumulation index. Outperformance was due to being underweight materials and overweight information technology combined with positive stock selection in industrials, consumer staples and communication services. Martin Currie underperformed due to negative stock selection in financials, materials, information technology and industrials. Quest underperformed due to negative stock selection in consumer discretionary and real estate and from being underweight financials and overweight consumer discretionary. Antares underperformed due to being overweight health care coupled with negative stock selection within that sector and from negative stock selection in financials, consumer discretionary, and materials.
