Market and portfolio review

Global equity markets delivered strong returns in the September quarter, fuelled by enthusiasm for U.S. AI-linked stocks and growing expectations of interest rate cuts. The OptiMix Emerging Markets cross investment outperformed its benchmark and significantly outperformed the MSCI ACWI Ex Aus index due to the strong performance of TT International and Neuberger. Brown Advisory underperformed due to negative stock selection in IT and financials and from being overweight financials. Lifecycle Investments underperformed due to negative stock selection in IT, financials and consumer discretionary. Alphinity underperformed due to negative stock selection in consumer discretionary, IT and communication services and from being overweight consumer staples. Intermede underperformed due to negative stock selection in IT, healthcare and materials and from being overweight materials and healthcare.

Future investment strategy

The US government entered a shutdown at midnight at the end of September for the first time in seven years after the US congress failed to pass a funding bill. Government shutdowns in the US tend to have minimal impact on the stock market, interest rates and the yield curve. The bigger challenge for markets is not the shutdown itself but the suspension of key economic data releases. With jobless claims, payrolls, and other high-frequency indicators on hold, investors and policymakers are effectively flying blind.

The broader macro backdrop remains constructive, with outright recession risks appearing limited despite signs of cooling. Labor market conditions are softening as hiring demand eases and payroll figures are revised lower, while participation remains constrained by structural factors such as retirements and reduced immigration. This measured moderation is giving the Fed cover to tilt its focus toward the employment side of its dual mandate, while tariff-related price pressures appear more transitory than structural.

Equity valuations are high in the US but tech earnings growth remains resilient. Cycicals may continue to outperform on the prospects for rate cuts. Bank stocks may benefit as yield curves steepen, and margins improve.

European stocks have outperformed the US this year but that has largely been driven by valuation multiples re-rating. Sustaining the rally will likely require an earnings pickup.

Hong Kong and China equities have taken off. Valuations still appear cheap relative to global peers, and the "anti-involution" campaign may help support margins and earnings growth by curbing excessive competition.
