Market and portfolio review

The monetary and fiscal stimulus measures announced in China - including a cut to their key interest rate, easing regulations to make it easier to buy properties, and direct cash injections for families with two or more children - drove a rotation out of Financials into Mining stocks and also into some consumer stocks that derive earnings from China. Financials had been the biggest year-to-date winners, with Materials one of the biggest laggards, so the announced stimulus and degree of under-positioning also drove some aggressive short covering. This accelerated gains even further, although this type of buying is usually less sustainable in the longer term. Most of the Australian market reported full year earnings during August, and most of the stock moves responded to their results more than the macro news that usually dominates. The number of earnings misses outnumbered beats in what was a slightly disappointing earnings season in aggregate. While revenues were largely in line, the misses came at the margin line with higher labour costs putting some pressure on profitability. Aside from the large moves made by the Fed and China, our own RBA is under increasing pressure around the timing of possible rate cuts in Australia giving inflation trends have continued to moderate throughout most developed markets. Over the quarter, the RBA stood firm with rates on hold, although the language did become slightly less hawkish from its previous meeting, suggesting that rate hikes are now off the table. Inflation came down from 3.8% in the year to June to 2.7% at the end of August, not dissimilar to the trend in the US although still at a notably higher level.

Future investment strategy

So while we see strong US rate cuts and Chinese stimulus as clear positives for both sentiment and underlying economic stability, and therefore justifies some rotation/covering, there remain enough questions as to not go "all in" on a strong cyclical recovery everywhere. As usual, we will let company earnings guide us, but at present we continue to see more risks than opportunities in the possible outcomes. Higher commodity prices might help, or at least diminish the downgrades, and that would be helpful for a sector we can see some value in. More broadly, we worry about the overall market multiple and the extent of positive outcomes that are being priced in. We know Banks are expensive, yet it is one of the few sectors to be seeing earnings upgrades right now, so it is hard to become too bearish. Industrials have also been expensive for some time, but that hasn't stopped them from performing. Has the outlook really improved so much that we should expect even more market upside? That is hard to say definitively, considering what we currently know, so some caution needs to remain.
