Market and portfolio review

Following the stellar performance in November AREITs continued a strong rally into year end. This was assisted by Federal Reserve Commentary indicating that they envisage three 25 bps rate cuts over the course of 2024. This followed the most recent CPI figures in the US being below expectations. There has been increasing expectations of rate cuts into 2024. As a consequence, bonds have rallied with the Australian 10-year nominal bond declining, this provides a positive backdrop for REIT sector performance. REITs have been an asset class that has been most adversely impacted from rising real bond yields as well as short term rates and consequently is transpiring to be a beneficiary of this shift.

Future investment strategy

While the US equity market in October was concerned that the economy was running too strongly and that another rate rise might be needed to tame inflation, a softer-than-expected inflation figure in November reversed that view and the market is now seemingly reassured that the economy is cooling meaningfully. The most recent quarter's reported earnings did surprise positively across most sectors, but full year earnings were largely unchanged. Has the Fed managed to engineer a slower economy without triggering a recession? Time will tell, although history suggests that soft landings have been rare once the slowdown has begun, especially when accompanied by a period of material and rapid rate tightening such as we have seen over the last year and a half. We would expect the earnings resilience the US has seen to date to be more significantly tested in 2024. At home, a more cautious tone about getting inflation under control was set by Michele Bullock, Australia's new Reserve Bank Governor, underscored by a further rate hike on Melbourne Cup Day. Although inflation here too has slowed, the Governor subsequently expressed concerns that Australia inflation is becoming more homegrown rather than being due to global supply chains as had largely been the case previously: demand is simply still higher than supply, especially for Services. Given the lack of spare capacity in the economy, a more meaningful demand slowdown will be required. Lower bond yields triggered another sharp rotation during November, with interest rate sensitive names outperforming. The equity market has more recently chosen to look across the valley of lower earnings, taking the view that we are at or close to peak rates, and that the odds of a recession here is discounted. Given the Governor's comments and the steep tightening to date, this appears somewhat optimistic to us. Earnings trends don't support this sector rotation. Property and Health Care companies for example, which were the two best performing sectors in November, are still experiencing negative earnings revisions in aggregate. From a Retail perspective, Black Friday sales appear to have been strong. However, this seems to have been largely driven by consumers seeking savings in this high cost of living environment likely pulling forward Christmas sales. For the whole of 2023, retail sales look to be flat to slightly positive, which is the weakest for some years. While there is no consumer recession so far, clearly some consumer segments are adjusting their spending patterns, leading to an uneven outlook.
