Market and portfolio review

Bond market returns were positive in November as global bond yields fell significantly, with the closely watched US 10-year Treasury yield ending the month over half a percentage point lower. Wage and labor markets showed signs of moderation, which eased fears over a higher for longer interest rate scenario and led to a repricing of rates lower.

The Fed Funds target range remained at the 5.25%-5.50% level at month end. The 2-year treasury yield rose from 5.07% to 4.73%, the 5-year treasury ended higher from 4.82% to 4.31%, and the 10-year treasury jumped from 4.88% to 4.37%. The 30-year rate also rose from 5.04% to 4.54%.

Investment grade corporates notably outperformed treasuries for the month, driven by increased expectations that a pivot by the Fed may be on the horizon. Possible Fed cuts in the coming year, combined with attractive all-in yields drove strong global demand for investment grade credit. Fixed-rate, gross investment grade supply for November was about $112bn, up from the previous month's $102bn.

High yield corporates also outperformed comparable maturity treasuries given a relatively strong economic backdrop and potential easing in monetary policy by the Fed. High yield supply rose substantially in November, with $18bn of new issuance versus the $9bn in issuance during October.

Structured securities (ABS, CMBS, MBS) posted positive excess returns in November. MBS significantly outperformed due to the rapid decline in rate volatility, which benefits residential mortgages given prepayment optionality, while ABS and CMBS were only modest outperformers.

Future investment strategy

Corporate credit remains a strategic theme across the investment grade platform, but caution persists as the longer-term impacts of tight monetary policy flow through the various segments of the market. An inverted yield curve may continue to present challenges across sectors, particularly with Banks given deposit flight risks. However, opportunities within financials may be a near term focus with spread levels remaining cheap compared to industrials. Credit fundamentals are weakening at this stage in the cycle, but balance sheet strength remains supportive as issuers weather tight financial conditions. Up-in-quality investment grade is preferred at this stage in the cycle, and while lower-rated credits remain a longer-term preference, where applicable. Curve positioning remains slightly favored towards short and intermediate maturities, but the appetite for duration is strengthening as rates may have peaked at this stage in the cycle.

Global growth should continue to trend lower as central bank policies target inflationary pressures, but resilient consumption and strong labor markets bode well for a soft-landing scenario. Disinflation has continued in line with expectations as the year comes to a close, and we believe the Fed is finished with hiking rates. Maintenance cuts are being priced in for 2024, but reacceleration and recession risks remain as tail scenarios. Market volatility is expected to persist, as the market reprices with policy expectations.

It is likely that global risk appetite is increasing as 2024 begins, with markets experiencing some volatility as they start to price in a recovery later in the year. The current market environment should favor equities, although fixed income is also poised to perform well given the likelihood of falling rates.
